Cause: The class does not define a public default constructor, or the constructor raised an exception. This error occurs when you invoke the default constructor for the domain object to create a new instance of the object while building new domain objects if: The class represents an abstract class, an interface, an array class, a primitive type, or void. The instantiation fails for some other reason.

Action: Inspect the internal exception, and refer to the Java documentation.

TOP-00035: Invalid event.

Cause: Applications should never encounter this exception. This exception usually occurs at the time of developing TopLink, although in cases, where you write new mapping, it is possible to get this exception. In direct collection mapping and many-to-many mapping, the target table and relational table are populated at the end of the commit process, and if a data modification event is sent to any other mapping, then this exception is raised.

TOP-00036: Invalid event code `[[0]]`.

Cause: An application should never encounter this exception. This exception usually occurs at the time of developing TopLink, although in cases, where you write new mappings, it is possible to get this exception. In direct collection mapping and many-to-many mapping, the target table and relational table are populated at the end of the commit process, and if a data modification event is sent to these two mappings with wrong event code, then this exception is raised.

TOP-00037: Invalid descriptor event code `[[0]]`.

Cause: An application should never encounter this exception. This exception usually occurs at the time of developing TopLink. The exception means that the descriptor event manager does not support the event code passed in the event.

Action: Contact Oracle Support Services.

Level: 1

Type: Error

TOP-00038: Identity map constructor failed because an invalid identity map was specified.

Cause: The identity map constructor failed because an invalid identity map was specified. The identity map class given in the descriptor cannot be instantiated. The exception is a Java exception that is raised by a Java reflection when TopLink instantiates the identity map class. TopLink wraps only the Java exception.

Action: Inspect the internal exception, and refer to the Java documentation.

TOP-00041: A non-read-only mapping must be defined for the sequence number field.

Cause: A non-read-only mapping is not defined for the sequence number field. A mapping is required so that TopLink can put and extract values for the primary key.

Action: Define a mapping.

Level: 1

Type: Error

Impact: Configuration

TOP-00043: Missing class for indicator field value [{0}] of type [{1}].

Cause: TopLink is missing the class for indicator field value classFieldValue of type type. There was no class entry found in the inheritance policy for the indicator field value that was read from the database. It is likely that the method addClassIndicator(Class class, Object typeValue) was not called for the field value. The class and typeValue are stored in a hash table, and later the class is extracted from the hash table by passing typeValue as a key. Because Integer(1) is not equivalent to Float(1), this exception occurs when the type of typeValue is incorrectly specified.

Action: Verify the descriptor.

Level: 1

Type: Error

Impact: Configuration

TOP-00044: Missing class indicator field from database row [{0}].

Cause: The class indicator field is missing from the database row that was read from the database. This is performed in the inheritance model where after reading rows from the database, child domain objects are to be constructed depending upon the type indicator values.

Action: Verify the printed row for correct spelling.

TOP-00047: The multiple table primary key mapping must be specified when a custom multiple table join is used.

Cause: The multiple table primary key mapping is not specified when a custom multiple table join is used. If multiple tables are specified in the descriptor and the join expression is customized, then the primary keys for all the tables must be specified. If the primary keys are not specified, then the exception occurs.

Action: Call the method `addMultipleTablePrimaryKeyFieldName(String fieldNameInPrimaryTable, String fieldNameInSecondaryTable)` on the descriptor to set the primary keys.

Level: 1

Type: Error

Impact: Configuration

TOP-00048: Multiple writable mappings exist for the field `[[0]]`. Only one may be defined as writable, all others must be specified read-only.

Cause: Multiple writable mappings for the field `fieldName` are defined in the descriptor. Exactly one must be defined as writable; the others must be specified as read-only. When multiple write mappings are defined for the field, TopLink is unable to choose the appropriate mapping for writing the value of the field in the database row. Therefore, the exception is raised during the validation process of descriptors.

Action: Make one of those mappings read-only.

TOP-04014: Cannot register SynchronizationListener.

Cause: TopLink cannot register the synchronization listener: underlying_exception_string. When the TopLink session is configured with an ExternalTransactionController, any unit of work requested by a client must operate within the context of a JTS external global transaction. When a unit of work is created and the external global transaction is not in existence, or if the system cannot acquire a reference to it, this error is reported.

Action: Verify that a JTS transaction is in progress before acquiring the unit of work.

TOP-04015: Synchronized UnitOfWork does not support the commitAndResume() operation.

Cause: A synchronized UnitOfWork does not support the commitAndResume operation. When the TopLink session is configured with an ExternalTransactionController, any unit of work requested by a client must operate within the context of a JTS external global transaction (see). The JTS specification does not support the concept of check pointing a transaction-that is, committing the work performed and then continuing to work within the same transaction context. JTS does not support nested transactions, either. As a result, if a client code invokes commitAndResume on a synchronized unit of work, this error is reported.

TOP-06005: The object `[[0]]`, of class `[[1]]`, with identity hashcode (`System.identityHashCode()`) `[[2]]`, is the original to a registered new object. The `UnitOfWork` clones registered new objects, so you must ensure that an object is registered before it is referenced by another object. If you do not want the new object to be cloned, use the `UnitOfWork.registerNewObject(Object)` API. If you are still having problems, you can use the `UnitOfWork.validateObjectSpace()` method to help debug where the error occurred. For more information, see the manual or FAQ.

Cause: The object clone of class `clone.getClass()` with identity hash code (`System.identityHashCode()`) (`System.identityHashCode(clone)`) is the original to a registered new object. WLS-WSEE-CORE-00002: The service port {1} bound to https transport in service {0} is NOT available, the https address cannot be resolved because SSL is not enabled for the server. The service port definition will be removed from WSDL that is being accessed through {2}.

Cause: While a WSDL is being retrieved through http protocol, the server requires replacing the service port address in WSDL with the actual address for the server. For any web service which defines one or more service ports bound to https transport, if the domain does not enable SSL functionality then the service port address could not be replaced correctly because https address for the server cannot be resolved.

Action: Enable SSL functionality for the server.

Type: WARNING

Impact: WebService

WLS-WSEE-CORE-00006: Implicit/generated Client Identity {0} has been used in multiple calls to Service.getPort()/createDispatch() where these calls have used different services and/or sets of features. Monitoring statistics for this client will include all these different usages. Validation failures were: {1}

Cause: WebLogic JAX-WS web service clients are assigned a unique identity that is intended to represent the business purpose of that client. This identity can be specified directly using `weblogic.jws.jaxws.client.ClientIdentityFeature` or it can be allowed to be implicit. Implicit identity is generated automatically based on environmental information at the point where a `Port/Dispatch` instance is created. Your code has received an implicit client identity that is getting used (again implicitly) across multiple services or sets of features. All statistics gathered for a given client instance are rolled up under the client instance's client identity. If client instances using different services and/or feature sets contribute statistics to the same client identity, this can be confusing. It is even possible for clients to behave incorrectly when more advanced web service features are used.

Action: Best practice is to create a specific client identity (with a name representing a logical business purpose) for the client and denote this identity by passing `weblogic.jws.jaxws.client.ClientIdentityFeature` to the call to `Service.getPort()/createDispatch`. Further, it is recommended that you pass a single/global set of web service feature objects to that call (e.g. Create `WebServiceFeature` instances as static class members or in a method annotated with `@PostConstruct` for containers compatible with this annotation). The actual call to `Service.getPort()/createDispatch()` should still be made in any way that makes sense for your uses (e.g. calling `getPort` on demand in a web service method, with `Service` created as a static class member).

WLS-WSEE-00105: Web services async/reliable invocations for service {0} are NOT available because the async/reliability queue was not found: {1}

Cause: You have deployed a Web service that indicates it can use async/reliable features, but the queue for async/reliable invocations (specified in WebservicesMBean, @Buffer or @ReliabilityBuffer annotations, or allowed to default) is not deployed to the local server. Therefore, async and reliable invocations will fail if attempted. Standard synchronous invocations will still work correctly despite this problem.

Action: Remove any async or reliable features from the Web service (e.g. @AsyncResponse, @Buffer, @ReliabilityBuffer annotations or @Policy annotations specifying reliable policy) or properly configure this server for async/reliable invocations. See the WebLogic Server online documentation in the 'Web Services->Get Started Using JAX-RPC' section for help on fixing this configuration problem. WLS-WSEE-00112: Implicit/generated Client Identity {0} has been used in multiple calls to Service.getPort()/createDispatch() where these calls have used different services and/or sets of features. Monitoring statistics for this client will include all these different usages. Validation failures were: {1}

Cause: WebLogic JAX-WS web service clients are assigned a unique identity that is intended to represent the business purpose of that client. This identity can be specified directly using `weblogic.jws.jaxws.client.ClientIdentityFeature` or it can be allowed to be implicit. Implicit identity is generated automatically based on environmental information at the point where a Port/Dispatch instance is created. Your code has received an implicit client identity that is getting used (again implicitly) across multiple services or sets of features. All statistics gathered for a given client instance are rolled up under the client instance's client identity. If client instances using different services and/or feature sets contribute statistics to the same client identity, this can be confusing. It is even possible for clients to behave incorrectly when more advanced web service features are used.

Action: Best practice is to create a specific client identity (with a name representing a logical business purpose) for the client and denote this identity by passing `weblogic.jws.jaxws.client.ClientIdentityFeature` to the call to `Service.getPort()/createDispatch`. Further, it is recommended that you pass a single/global set of web service feature objects to that call (e.g. Create `WebServiceFeature` instances as static class members or in a method annotated with `@PostConstruct` for containers compatible with this annotation). The actual call to `Service.getPort()/createDispatch()` should still be made in any way that makes sense for your uses (e.g. calling `getPort` on demand in a web service method, with `Service` created as a static class member).

WLS-WSEE-PERSIST-00007: Improper buffering queue type {0} with JNDI name {1} configured on logical store {2}. You must use Uniform Distributed Queues or simple Queues with web services.

Cause: You configured an invalid type of queue for a logical store (via the RequestBufferingQueueJndiName or ResponseBufferingQueueJndiName properties). You must use Uniform Distributed Queues (recommended) or plain Queues. If you wish to take advantage of migration features of web services in a cluster, you must use Uniform Distributed Queues. Note, when using configuration wizard or WLST to apply the wls_webservice_jaxws.jar extension template, you must explicitly request the creation of Uniform Distributed Queues as described in the web services documentation. By default, the configuration wizard and WLST create Weighted Distributed Queues in a cluster.

Action: Configure a Uniform Distributed Queue (or Queue) and provide this queue's JNDI name to the logical store configuration (via the RequestBufferingQueueJndiName or ResponseBufferingQueueJndiName properties). Note, you can do this from the configuration wizard or WLST when applying the wls_webservice_jaxws.jar extension template, and the proper type and number of queues will be created automatically for you. See the web services documentation for more information on requesting Uniform Distributed Queues when using the template.
